

Conner and Morgan

Dear birth mom,

First and foremost, thank you for taking the time to read our letter. We can only imagine the strength, love, and courage it takes to consider adoption for your child, and we want you to know that we hold deep respect and admiration for you. Though we don't know each other yet, please know that we're already praying for you everyday. We know that this decision is not easy, and we honor whatever path you choose.

We are a couple who have dreamed of becoming parents, and your decision is making our dream come true. We promise to raise a child with kindness, honesty, and all the opportunities we can provide—whether that means a backyard to play in, bedtime stories every night, or a steady hand to hold through every joy and challenge. We will raise them knowing the love of Jesus and how his sacrifice makes us whole again.

We understand that adoption is not just the beginning of a child's story—it's also a continuation of yours. If you are open to it, we would be honored to maintain a connection with you, in whatever way feels right for you. We believe it's important for a child to know where they come from and to feel proud of their story, including the incredible love that brought them into the world.

Thank you again for considering us as potential parents. We would be beyond grateful and humbled to be part of your child's life. Whatever decision you make, we pray you would have peace, strength, and confidence every step of the way.

With love,

Conner and Morgan

Our story

Conner and I first met in high school (I always had a crush on him, but he never knew), reconnected in college, and then started dating. We got married when we were 22 and 23 and are coming up on our seven-year wedding anniversary. Some people would consider that young to get married, but we were not only excited to grow old together, but to grow up together, as well. Together we have bought our first home, gotten our first dog, and started our first careers. As high school English and Math teachers, we have the flexibility to travel around during breaks and summers and experience new cultures and cities. Conner and I are thankful to God for the years we have been able to spend together as best friends. We both come from loving and supportive families who have been with us every step of the way. When it came time that we wanted to grow our family three years ago, we quickly realized it was going to be more difficult than we expected. After being diagnosed with unexplained infertility, we began to feel pulled towards adoption. Now we are excited to care for a baby who needs a loving home.

A NOTE FROM CONNER

Morgan truly has a servant's heart. She shows her love for people in so many ways, but one of the best ways is by helping them with anything and everything they may need (even if it's just making sure they are well fed!). She loves deeply and is fiercely loyal to those she loves. I've always known this about her, but it has become even more evident in the way she cares for her nieces and nephews. Morgan has a way of connecting with others that is truly special. People tend to just feel comfortable around her because she is genuine and kind, and as a result people gravitate to her. One of the things I love most about Morgan is her soft, empathetic heart. From her family to her friends to her students, Morgan cares deeply for others and would do anything for anyone. She is a true example of a love that puts the needs of others first. I have complete certainty that Morgan will be an incredible, life-changing mom.

A NOTE FROM MORGAN

Conner is truly himself no matter who he is around or what situation he is in. He's the smartest person I know, and the way that he cares for and includes people that others may not notice is special. He loves his nieces and nephews, and seeing them interact with him makes me know he is going to be such a good dad. He is energetic, thoughtful, adventurous, and everything you want in a spouse. On any regular day you can catch him scoping out a new restaurant for us to try, perfecting his jump shot in the driveway, or building a new bookshelf for our house. He is a man of many hobbies, so I trust that whatever our future child may be into, Conner will easily be able to support that and be interested in it, too. He's a young soul at heart. Conner has made the last seven years the best of my life, and I can't wait to see him become a father!

Our family

Conner's side of the family has started a tradition where instead of buying Christmas presents for each other, we all go and have an experience together. This year, we went on a scenic train-ride to a town nearby and got to create new memories together. This makes every Christmas new and exciting, and it emphasizes the importance of being with each other instead of focusing on what we all got as gifts!

The one thing Morgan's step-mom asks for every year on her birthday is for the whole family to get together to take some family photos. This one was taken a couple of years ago. It all started with a blended family of seven and has grown to a whopping 13! (newest addition to the family not pictured). We're excited to continue the growth of our family.

How 'bout them apples

Morgan's family has the annual tradition of going apple picking and scoping out the best crimson crisp apples mother nature can grow. Her mom makes a mouth watering apple pie that pairs best with vanilla bean ice cream. We look forward to the road trip to the orchard every year. Watching our nephew and niece experience apple picking makes us excited for our own little one to run around the orchard one day, too!

Teaching

You can't really talk about us without talking about our teaching careers. Conner and I both feel like God has called us to pour into high schoolers and help them feel safe, loved, and valued. Our passion lies in caring for these students that come through our classrooms every year. We both teach students that come from all types of backgrounds, which is a big reason Conner has been learning Spanish! From basketball games and theatre performances, to band concerts and eventually graduation, we try our best to show up for the students in our lives. In many ways, adoption makes so much sense to us because how much we have grown to love other people's kids.

We live in a private neighborhood in a small community that is just thirty minutes from a very large city. Being so close to this type of city gives us benefits like easy access to the zoo, aquarium, professional sporting events, and large parks. We live in an area with parks, nature trails and consistent activities for kids. Our cozy home has plenty of room for a growing family and lots of yard space for outdoor games.

Thank you!
